

NASA's James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) is a large infrared telescope with a 6.5-meter primary mirror. Thousands of astronomers worldwide will use JWST to study the Universe, including the evolution of the Solar System and the formation of distant stellar systems that might be capable of supporting life on Earth-like planets.